Aircraft Support Industries exhibits at the MRO Americas Airshow 2016

Aircraft Support Industries successfully debuts at the MRO Americas Airshow held at the Convention Center in Dallas, Texas from the 5th – 7th April 2016. The MRO Americas Airshow was an open platform for Aircraft Support Industries to network and develop relationships with other industry leaders. For 21 years the commercial air transport maintenance, repair and overhaul community has recognized MRO Americas as the industry's premiere event.

The American Aviation Industry is currently benefiting resurgence due to the strong dollar and lowered oil prices. In addition with the increased labour rates in Asia Pacific more American carriers are opting to carry out their heavy maintenance on home soil. The Airlines are relishing record profits and looking to invest heavily in new and upgraded facilities.

To meet the demand and in an aim to further reduce costs the airlines are raising the number of aircraft sent to South America for maintenance. Many new large scale MRO operations are being established in El Salvador, Puerto Rico, Costa Rica and Mexico. There is also rapid growth in the Latin American market with record levels of aircraft on order from Boeing and Airbus.

Having been absent for a number of years in the US, Aircraft Support Industries participated in the show to regain exposure and to demonstrate their vast experience in the design of aircraft maintenance facilities to a primarily American audience. With more than 800 exhibitors MRO Americas is the 'go-to' show for the industry. Richard Gibbons, Aircraft Support Industries Business Development Director said "The show provided the ideal platform to introduce Aircraft Support Industries' services as experts in the field of hangar design to a relatively, and so far, untapped market. I was pleasantly surprised how amenable senior management of prospective customer organisations were spending time listening to what Aircraft Support Industries had to offer. A number of very good opportunities have come from the few days in Dallas".

Aircraft Support Industries will re-exhibit at the MRO Americas Airshow in 2017 at Orlando, Florida from the 25th – 27th April.
